Oak Hall and the Bi-Centennial.

Our exhibit in the Trades Procession of the Bi-Centennial Celebration on October 25th will illustrate the great stock of men's and boys' clothing now ready in Oak Hall. Our preparations for the trade of this Autumn and Winter already reach

One Million Dollars.

Our stock is in all respects the best we have ever offered, and we firmly believe has never been equaled in volume by any retail clothing house in America.

Do not fail to visit Oak Hall. Look at the Clothing and Piece Goods, go through the workrooms and see how the vast place goes on. We have a hearty welcome for all, whether buyers or visitors. The tens of thousands of friends we have made in the country about Philadelphia during the last twenty-two years are, we are sure, more firmly our friends than ever before. We have gained their confidence by giving them the best dollar's worth of clothing to be had anywhere, and we offer a new pledge of fidelity in our low prices and elegant Autumn stock for this year's sales.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

SELECT STORY.

BEHIND MINERVA'S SHIELD.

Homer Ashton, one autumn evening, listened to stories of witches and ghosts told around him, and joined in them, until he felt an occasional shiver creeping down his back. Not that he believed in the supernatural, but the firelight into which he sat looking grew pleasanter to him than the corners of the great room, for lamps had been banished to accord with the subject under discussion, and it seemed that the shadows, flickering [illegible] the young people grouped about the grate of blazing coal were [illegible] and weird, and that when one glanced at them sideways suddenly there was something around them like ghostly visitors. When he faced them, to be sure, they were only ordinary shadows. Homer was ashamed of himself; he was afraid his nerves were unsteady and resolved to test them. He knew a way to do it.

Near the place at which he was staying, an English country house, were the ruins of the older part of a castle said to have been built in the time of the Crusades. The whole castle was at present uninhabited, but the part which had been allowed to fall into hopeless decay was the width of the courtyard away from the rest of the house. Probably it had once been connected with it by buildings which had formed the sides of a hollow square, but if so, it had been left out in the changes made at different times and now it was roofless, the walls were crumbled, and the underground portion was all that made any pretense to a habitation, and offered a suitable home to the uncanny beings who were said to roam in it, for [illegible] and the air had a deadly chill. But these facts seemed conclusions from the nature of things rather than the result of observations, for Homer could not find anybody who had explored it.

Ghosts ought really to be forgiven a good many faults, because they are in general so unselfish about selecting homes nobody else wants.

That evening, as Ashton connected the reports of the place itself with stories of sights and sounds around it, he found himself yielding so much to the influence of gossip that he determined to shake off the weakness and to try what stuff he was made of. He would stand in those haunted halls and [illegible] the gossips, and see what would happen. He knew enough that it would be nothing.

But he did not tell his plan to the others: he said merely that he was going for a walk to blow away this ghostly atmosphere by a little fresh air. Nobody volunteered to accompany him. Night had never seemed more dreadful to them all. They only looked at each other significantly as he left them, and said:

"Another Americanism."

There is an unreasoning element in human nature which assumes every individuality of a foreigner to be a national characteristic. Dr. Ashton, whom the son of the house had become acquainted with in London and brought home with him for a visit, was to his entertainers an epitome of America, and it must be confessed that at the end of a week they had come to have a good opinion of that country.

As Homer walked on rapidly he saw an occasional star in the sky, but it seemed as if he never could get out of the shadow of the trees, there were so many of them.

He soon came to the ruin a mile away; he opened the heavy gate and began to descend the long flight of stairs leading into the corridors and rooms underground. What would the old place have been used for? Did monks come here for prayers or penances, or were these dungeons where captives taken in the petty warfares of those times felt the personal vengeance of their captors? He thought of the one described in "Ivanhoe," into which Isaac the Jew was thrown—dark, damp, hung with chains and shackles, and where, in the ring of one set of fetters were two mouldering human bones. It was no wonder ghosts were said to haunt a place like that.

In the midst of these thoughts the gate he had left open swung to with a clang, shutting out earthly things behind him. Step by step he went down the stone stairs into blackness to which the night outside was twilight. Sometimes he seemed to hear a sound, but when he stopped to listen, it was the beating of his heart. When he reached the foot of the stairs he still went on; everywhere his outstretched hands struck against a wall or pillar, for he was passing through an arched hall that ended in a narrow passage. He next entered what he thought must be a large room, for the air had an indefinable difference, and the blackness seemed that of space instead of substance. As he stood there, uncertain which way to move and the very echo of his footsteps ceased, the horror of darkness and silence which had been growing upon him reached its height. He tried to utter his challenge, but his dry lips would give fourth no sound, an abyss of night seemed to swallow him up.

Suddenly he fancied he heard a movement, he thought that something like palpable blackness flitted about him. He turned to fly and took a few hurried steps in the direction of the entrance. Then he stopped. It was no ghostly presence that arrested him, but the iron hand of his resolution; he had come here to do a certain thing and was not to be cowed by a feeling which he would be ashamed to own to himself in the daylight. He faced about and went foward quickly a few steps.

"If there is any ghost let him now appear," he called loudly.

The dreary walls answered his cry with dull reverberation.

With arms folded he stood a moment—the hardest thing of all to do—awaiting results. If there had not been a roar in his ears, if the beating of his heart had not made even his vision unsteady, he would have said that he heard subdued laughter, or moaning, it was impossible to tell which as the sound rolled toward him from the hollow sides, and that he saw something like whiteness in the distance, while a sense of presence made him cold with horror.

He had done all he had resolved to do and was free to get out of this dreadful place. He hurried toward the entrance, urged on by the unreasoning sense of pursuit that comes over one when he turns his back upon danger. And all at once he lost footing and lay at full length upon the slippery floor; the shock, however, only jarred and bewildered him. As he put out his hands to rise he touched something from which he drew back instantly with a stifled exclamation; he thought it must be one of the reptiles likely to be crawling in this den. But he recollected that it was a curious stone which would prove his night's excursion if the strangers he was with should be tempted to doubt it. After a little groping he found it again; it felt like a stone with slimy moisture, and putting it into his pocket he made his way out of the ruins as best he could.

When he returned to the house his friend was alone waiting for him, and sleepy, as Homer could see, consequently a trifle annoyed at being kept up so late. The guest said nothing that night of where he had been.

In his room he took out the stone. It was not a pebble or a piece of the pavement, as he had supposed, but an oval of grayish lava that had once been a brooch or part of a bracelet. As he cleared it with his penknife and pocket handkerchief he saw that the work upon it was beautiful; it was a figure of Minerva, the very folds in her tunic carefully cut, and, as he saw by his magnifying glass, with a light tracery of carving on her helmet and shield. On the opposite side, just under the shield, was the word "Violet."

It was evidently the owner's name, but who was she? Where did she live, and when? The pin, if it were the pin, had not lain in its last hiding place long he thought, it was not enough stained by the dampness, yet he was not sure about that. "Violet" might belong to a former generation, or might have been sleeping the sleep of the just for a century. But suppose not—suppose she were a young lady beautiful as her name, wealthy and high born? Well, what then?

Homer put out his light and went to bed, but not immediately to sleep. The affair seemed to promise an adventure; as such it would have been interesting to any young person. But Ashton, in addition to being barely 25, had been obliged to make his way for the last ten years; for, though he was of good family, Dame Fortune had started him in life with no more than one of her pennies, which, however, every time a man turns it, as in the legend, leaves a gold piece in his hand.

The next morning but one a tall young man with dark hair and eyes and an expression amused yet resolute, handed in his card at Grantham Hall and asked to see its owner, Sir Gresham Land.

"Dr. Homer Ashton," cried Sir Gresham, looking up from his letters displeased at the interruption. "Who's he? I don't know any such person. Beryl," to the servant, "what does he look like?"

"A swell, Sir Gresham, only spryer."

"Oh, spryer, is he? In his head or his heels, I wonder? Well, I suppose I must see what he wants; one of these genteel sponges came to suck up as many pounds as I'll give to their deuced charities," he muttered. By which speech it is fair to conclude that Sir Gresham had been sponged in this way more than once.

But when Homer, who was admiring the view from the drawing room window, turned and bowed as the baronet approached, Sir Gresham perceived nothing of the suppliant about him, and began to doubt whether this elegant stranger did mean to make him a few pounds the poorer by his visit. He came forward and requested his visitor to be seated. Ashton spoke of the beauty of the country and Sir Gresham answered him; but at the moment curiosity was his ruling passion.

"You are wondering why I came," said Homer. "Certainly it was not to tell what everybody knows—that is the finest situation about here. But I have in my possession part of an ornament which, I believe, belongs to "Miss Land."

"You! What is it?"

Ashton bowed and smiled also, so he handed the other his discovery of the night but one before. "Does it belong to your daughter?" he said.

But Sir Gresham was too bewildered to answer him.

"That?" he cried. "Good heavens! that? Where did you find it? It's a clue."

"A clue to what?" cried Homer eagerly. He felt on the brink of discovering how a lady's ornament could come in so strange a place.

But Sir Gresham was too excited by some suggestion awakened by the sight of the stone to have an idea of trying to satisfy any curiosity but his own.

"Where did you find it?" he repeated.

"Is it your daughter's?" returned Homer.

"Yes, it must be hers!" and remembering at last to thank the young man for returning it, he stood with the stone in his hand waiting impatiently for a full account of its recovery.

"Does Sir Gresham Land suppose that I came here for the purpose of telling a midnight adventure to him?" thought Homer, as a look of amusement flitted across his face. "If you will be so kind," he answered, suavely, "as to ask Miss Land if she will do me the favor to indentify her ornament, I shall be most happy to tell you, and her, if she cares to know, how I came by it."

Sir Gresham hesitated only an instant. "Assuredly," he said, and sent for his daughter.

The young man's heart beat faster at the sound of light steps behind him. Suppose Violet were plain and heavy-looking, yet suppose—he turned hastily, but not too soon for the beautiful face that was coming toward him. "She was named for her eyes," thought Homer; and there was something else he thought too, but no more could be spoken for a moment. She greeted him, but when she saw the medallion in her father's hand she cried:

"Oh, papa my bracelet clasp! where did you get it? Have they found out the robbers?"

Homer's eyes opened wide at her words.

"Robbers?" he repeated. "That's it, then! Perhaps I really did hear and see something after all?" And after a moment, in which three people stood facing each other with looks of inquiry, he began an account of his expedition to the ruin. He was truthful in every detail, yet the story sounded remarkably well as he told it, watching Violet's face and seeing her shiver and grow pale in imagining the blackness of the old cellars. If she would but "love him for the dangers he had passed;" he knew nothing of wars, to be sure, except of personal struggles with misfortune, out of place to be told here, yet having left their mark upon him in a consciousness of power to dare and conquer adverse circumstances.

"I've no doubt they carried their booty there," cried Sir Gresham, his thoughts still in the ruins of an infinite distance behind the young man's winged fancy and supplementing the narrative which Ashton had just finished. While Violet was listening to her father's account of a daring burglary committed the winter before while the family were in the house, Ashton had an opportunity to study her face more critically, or rather more admiringly. It was possible he did not drop all the admiration out of his expression as from time to time she turned to him to explain more fully something that her father was saying.

"I've no doubt the villians bring their booty miles to hide in the ruin," said Sir Gresham. "This medallion was the clasp of a heavy gold bracelet. It was given to my daughter by a friend, and she is much obliged to you, I am sure, for finding it."

"Indeed I am," said Violet, coloring a little as she spoke.

"It is I who am under obligations to fate," answered Homer; "I have found something that Miss Land values."

"The rest of the bracelet has been melted down long ago," pursued Sir Gresham. "That place ought to be searched."

"Yes," said Homer, "when will you do it?"

The baronet looked somewhat taken aback at this energetic suggestion.

"No doubt," he answered, "and perhaps, Dr. Ashton, you would like to be one of the party if I go with some of my neighbors? I suppose it ought to be done as soon as possible, within a day or two," he went on, as the other assented, "lest they would take alarm at your intrusion upon them. When should you advise going?"

"This moment," cried Homer. "It's a wonder that we Americans have any grass in our country," he added, smiling, "we are so averse to letting it grow under our feet."

He met Violet's eye as he finished, and read in them an admiration and interest. In another moment she had turned away on some trifling pretext, but, undoubtedly, she was blushing. How was Homer to know that she had once declared she would marry the man who brought her back her bracelet clasp? That, however, was when she was quite sure it would never be found.

"Not until after luncheon, papa, will you?" she said. "You'd better not take Dr. Ashton until after that."

Several years later, when the medallion had led to more than the finding of stores of plunder in the old ruins which a gang of thieves had taken care to make appear haunted, Homer Ashton, a physician of high standing, was living in a large American city. A schoolmate whom he had not met for years, said to him one day at dinner as they were talking of marriage and deaths among their former comrades:

"By the way, Ashton, you never told me where you first met your wife. I only know that it was in England."

He laughed.

"I first met her," he said, "behind Minerva's shield. Did I not Violet?"—Our Continent.

Dutch Bulbs For Winter.

At the September meeting of the New York Horticultural Society, an essay on the care of bulbs for house decoration in winter was read by Mr. John Thorpe, one of the members of the society, which we give in a condensed form. Many of our readers will find its suggestions helpful in preparing and caring for their bulbs for winter and spring flowering. The greater portion of bulbs used for house decoration are what are known as Dutch Bulbs (not that they are Dutch, but from the fact that Holland, with its low sandy soil, was identified for centuries as the most suitable place for their production.) These are Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus Crocus, with a few other kinds not used in such large quantities. The importation of this year is the largest ever known, and is ten times larger than ten years ago. One of the first and most important principles is to obtain good, sound bulbs. These are easily to be had from reliable dealers during September, October, and November. Another principle is good soil. The best soil is what is known as sandy loam. Rich garden soil with a sprinkling of fine bone meal, in proportion of one tablespoonful to each two quarts of soil, is good.

Bulbs must have good drainage. For all they are great lovers of water, they will not bear anything like stagnation or putrid soil.

Do not subject bulbs to extremes of temperature; never water them with cold water, if you have them in a warm room; never set them near a heater, or on the mantelpiece above a fire; do not bring them into too warm a situation until they show signs of growing rapidly; and remember to give them all the air and sunlight possible. Pot them as early as possible. Set them out of doors in a situation where the water can drain away, covering the pots entirely to the depth of four or five inches.

Hyacinths require pots of five inches in diameter, one bulb in each. The pots must be well drained, with either pieces of broken pots or charcoal. One-third or more is not too much. A few rough pieces of soil to be put in first, then filling up two-thirds with finer soil. On this a pinch of sand; then press on this the bulb rather firmly, filling up to within an inch of the top. Water thoroughly. Then place out of doors; or where it is not convenient to place out of doors, a dry, cool cellar will be found almost to serve the same purpose. Hyacinths in glasses are easily managed and require but little attention. To be successful, bulbs should be placed in glasses not later than the end of October, choosing single varieties only and using clear water. Drop in one or two pieces of charcoal as large as a hickory-nut. Allow the water to just touch the plate or bottom of the bulb. Place the glasses in a dark, cool, dry cellar, occasionally examining them, and when the water has evaporated, filling up as required. They should remain until the roots have nearly reached the bottom of the glasses, when they can be brought to the light. The most airy and light part of a room is the best position for them. As the bulbs make growth, more evaporation will take place, therefore the water should be replenished at intervals. When the flower-spikes begin to show color, the glasses should be kept full to the brim, as at the period of flowering the bulbs absorb a great quantity of moisture.

Tulips follow Hyacinths very closely in popularity for house decoration. Next in order are the Narcissus, of several species, requiring about the same treatment as Tulips and Hyacinths. The next to be mentioned is, the exquisitely colored and elegantly shaped Crocus. These have considerably smaller bulbs, with their five to seven flowers each. They can be grouped quite close, either in pots, vases, boxes, or baskets, using the soil recommended previously. They require to be kept in a rather lower temperature than either Hyacinths or Narcissus.

Now, presuming the bulbs are covered outside, after the middle of November they should be covered more, with some protective material or brought into a cool part of the house—either in a light cellar or some room where frost does not actually penetrate. Towards the middle of December, those showing the most growth can be brought into warmer quarters. The foliage of plants must be kept clean and free from dust, with a small piece of sponge, or a silk handkerchief, occasionally sprinkling over head with tepid water. Water carefully when dry, and be sure the water penetrates the whole mass.—N. Y. Observer.

The use of Plaster.

Plaster is an invaluable fertilizer. There is no doubt of this, and for some crops and upon some soils it acts with marvelous effect. For clover, peas, corn, oats and grass, it often produces such effect that one is puzzled to account for it. Whether it is the sulphuric acid or the gypsum itself, has not yet been satisfactorily shown. It is known that crystals of gypsum are found in the sap of clover and some other plants, but whether these are normally present or accidentally so, from a redundancy of the elements of sulphate of lime, which have entered into combination in the juices of the plants, has not yet been explained. Mr. George Geddes, the well known farmer of Western New York, has kept a part of his farm which is too distant from the barn to draw manure there profitably, in a state of high fertility by the steady use of plaster upon clover sod for wheat crop. Some soils, however, refuse to respond to an application of plaster, but these cases are exceptional, and, in general, plaster is very beneficial. Its best use, probably, is a deodorizer in stables, to take up the ammonia so freely formed there by the decomposition of the urine, and change it to inodorous sulphate of ammonia, which is retained in the manure to the considerable enrichment of the latter. The plaster not only then serves a useful purpose to the stable, but it goes into the soil with the manure in a state of combination in which it may do more good than if applied alone and in its raw state.—Orange County (N. Y.) Farmer.

Out in Faribault, Minn., there is a nice girl who one day recently got it into her head that she would like to show her lover that she knew a thing or two about art. At an Eastern seminary, from which she had returned a few months before, she had been instructed in modeling. After much backing and filling her young man consented to have his bust taken from life, in plaster. The fair artist forgot to grease her subject's face, and the plaster, ambitious to do its part in the exhibition, clung to the youth and hardened and fastened upon his classic features. The goose-quills through which he was to pump air to his lungs slipped, and the plaster, rushing in to fill the vacancy, nearly smothered him before it could be removed. It became evident before the work had been in progress an hour that the experiment was not an entire success and the beautiful sculptor undertook to relieve her model. The cast was broken off piece-meal, bringing with it patches of whisker, patches of skin, a sample of mustache, the tip of an ear, and so forth; and at the end of eight of the longest hours of his life the model escaped from the artist, and setting what was left of his nose surgeon-ward followed it to the doctor's for repairs. One might fancy that the lass lost her lover as well as her subject but she didn't, for Mrs. Browning says:

Love strikes higher with his lambent flame
Than Art can pile the fagots.

William A. Wallace has been nominated for the state senate in the 34th district.

Gen. H. W. Early has been nominated for Congress by the democrats in the sixteenth district.

This month Pennsylvania democrats met with smiling faces, and said "Have you heard the news from Ohio?" Next month the Ohio democrats will exclaim with the same pleasant smile, "Have you heard the news from Pennsylvania!".

The charge made by Republican organs that Hon. John B. Storm is a free trader, is the only one that they have attempted against him, and as this is false they have nothing to stand on. Everybody recognizes his ability and purity, neither of which have ever been questioned.

From now until the evening of November 7th every democrat should use his influence to get out a full vote. It is no idle boast to say that we are bound to carry the state, and nothing but stay at home democrats can defeat us. Columbia county should give Pattison and the whole ticket as large a majority as she gave Hancock in 1880. LET US MAKE IT 2500.

It is impossible to conceive what influence can be brought to bear on a democrat that can induce him to vote for Beaver. We have heard of but one case in the whole state and that one is not far from here. Just think how badly that man will feel after the election, at having thrown his vote away. He can't take any part in the jubilee.

It is reported in the news papers that colored Cadet Whittaker, and Rev. Henry Ward Beecher have left the republicans and joined the democratic party. If it is true that the republican party is so corrupt that Whittaker and Beecher cant stay in it any longer, then it is really in a bad way; and if the democratic party can escape contamination with those fellows in it, then it is indeed the salt of the world.

"An Honest Confession is Good for the Soul."

Gen. Beaver passed through Bloomsburg on Tuesday on his way to Danville. The stalwart leaders skirmished around and got together a few of the faithful and went to the depot to greet him. Beaver came to the platform of the car and said, "that he would like to visit Bloomsburg, but he was so entirely under the control of the bosses that he had to go wherever they sent him." A truer word was never spoken in jest.

The Republican this week admits in effect, that the Democratic party will win this fall. It finds that "one by one the Independents are drifting into the democratic camp." If this be true, it will give us 100,000 majority in the state. The Republican desires all "honest Independents" to return to the regular camp, but as it claims there are no honest Independents, this cuts down the number who might return, to a cipher. It calls Independents "cowardly and sneaking enemies" an argument which is well calculated to bring back all wanderers to the Cameron fold.

Republicans hope to carry the election in this state by the expenditure of a half a million of dollars to be used in buying votes and corrupting the ballot box, by circulating documents containing speeches of Pattison which he never made, and by raising funds for these purposes by repudiating their own platform. Democrats hope to win through the ability and purity of their candidates, the solidity of their platform upon which they stand squarely and by seeing that every voter goes to the polls on the day of election, and casts his ballot for Pattison and the whole ticket.

Which party deserves to succeed?

Is it not about time for Attorney General Brewster to resign? He has made the Department of Justice at Washington a stench in the nostrils of all honest and decent men. Bowen with the blonde woman dining with him, and the brunette one pawning her silk dresses to get him out of jail, is a nice party to run the Star Route trials, and fill the Department of Justice with bribery. And then comes Brewster Cameron! "Phoebus, what a name!" Think of an honest man with such a name. The thing is impossible. He comes to tell how he came to fix up the jury. And the Attorney General's friend from Philadelphia, freeman Dickson tells his story. Resign Brewstea, resign!

A mortar used for throwing bombs exploded at Fairmount park, Philadelphia, on Tuesday night during the display of fire works, killing six people, and wounding many more.

Beaver was nominated, and to-day stands on a platform which he dare not defend. That platform denounces political assessments, but from the opening of the campaign to this time, General Beaver has not said one word in favor of that plank. The manner in which his canvass is being conducted has closed his mouth, and he dare not denounce a practice which is furnishing him with means to corrupt voters, hire brass bands, and circulate documents containing speeches of Pattison which were never made. As a "Christian gentleman", Beaver should denounce those methods, instead of putting himself in the light of a political hypocrite, professing to believe one thing in his platform, and yet permitting those very abuses to be practiced for his own benefit. After the election, when he has time to reflect, he will see his mistake.

There is trouble in store for the Republicans of the fifteenth congressional district, composed of Bradford, Susquehannah, Wayne, and Wyoming counties. At their recent conference Edward Overton of Bradford was nominated, defeating C. C. Jadwin of Wayne, the present member, who had served but one term. Overton has been in congress two terms before. Jadwin now charges Overton with bad faith and will run against him. The democrats have nominated G. A. Post of Wayne. Unless the breach is speedily healed, and the prospects now are against it, the democrats will gain a congressman in that district. This is not the only republican distict that has trouble of the same kind. As the stalwarts see the government gradually slipping away from them it puts them in bad humor, and they are having family fights all around.

Powderly for Pattison

A large and enthusiastic democratic mass meeting was held at Nanticoke last week Friday. Among the speakers was Mayor T. V. Powderly of Scranton, one of the foremost labor reformers in the state. Referring to the election he said:

"I have acted with the labor reform party ever since its inception. I am a labor reformer from principle, and I want to warn you against those who are not so; for it is an unfortunate fact that bad and vicious men from the slums have usurped the right to speak for the labor reform party and seek to barter its support to the old parties for a price. Such men have made themselves conspicuous in the pending campaign and have gone with an offer of the votes they cannot deliver to the Cameron party. They are wicked men and I warn you against them. I warn you not to vote the stalwart ticket nor the independent ticket. Do not throw your votes away on the latter, neither on the so-called labor ticket, or any side ticket, but vote the democratic ticket entire. Vote for Pattison. Pattison represents true reform. He represents economy and honesty in public expenditures. He represents the reform that will lower taxes, relieve industries and thereby make better wages for labor. Vote for him. Stand squarely in this issue by him and by his party and you will have no reason to regret your action."

Beaver on Cameron.

A few months ago Beaver said Don Cameron was "a small man" This, of course, was by special permission of the Boss. Finding the ground slipping from beneath him, Beaver has found it necessary to denounce Cameron with more vigor, and so at a meeting in Pittsburg last week, he used the following language, by permission.

"I have no sympathy with the so called Independent movement in this State. I am not in sympathy with Senator Cameron and most heartily condemn the manner in which he has often used the power of his position.

As I see it now, I am free to say that I do not think his re-election as Senator would be for the best interests of the party, the State or the nation. And if, when the time comes, I am living, I will use what influence I have to secure the election of an abler and better man

But I do not think that it is well to break up the Republican party in order to obtain from the fragments a club for Cameron" After Beaver's promise to his constituents, and his betrayal of their cofidence at Chicago, when he was instructed for Blaine, but voted for Grant with the "306," who will put any faith in his declarations! " As he sees it now, Don Cameron is a mill stone about his neck, and is dragging him to defeat, but if he should be elected he would change his goggles, and see things in a very different light. After accepting the nomination from Cameron as a Christmas gift, it would be cowardly in Beaver to denounce the man that made him, if it were not that he is acting under instructions from headquarters.

The Advantage of Having an Honest Democrat for Governor.

In one of the most influential Republican newspapers of the State we find the following reference to MR. TILDEN'S public services: "Gov. Tilden used the veto power with great freedom, and with the effect of appreciably reducing the tax rate of the State. Gov. Tilden rendered another service to the State—a service which was not fully appreciated at the time, and which may have been prompted by motives not altogether worthy—but a service nevertheless which surpasses anything that any recent Governor has been able to render the Commonwealth. We refer to the breaking up of the Canal Ring which had fastened its talons into the vitals of the Treasury. Nothing since done by Governor or Legislature has effected such a radical extirpation of taxes as Mr. Tilden's successful warfare upon the Canal Ring thieves. This is a fact which stands plumply in the light of any assertion that good government for the Empire State is only possible under Republican administration."

This frank admission is made by the Utica Herald, at a time when many thousands of Republicans are still undecided whether to vote for a Democrat or not to vote at all for Governor. New York Sun.

The same general condition of things which existed at Albany when Tilden ran for Governor, exists now at Harrisburg, with Pattison running for Governor of Pennsylvania. And the same character for inflexible honesty which Tilden has acquired, and which gave him 50,000 majority over Gen. Dix, Pattison has also acquired as Controller of the city of Philadelpha, and which ought to, and will give him 50,000 over Gen. Beaver. An honest administration can only be made by an honest man, and the man in this campaign who has proved himself to be honest is Pattison.

The board appointed to audit the claims growing out of the illness and death of President Garfield have recieved Dr. Boynton's bill which amounts to but $4,500, being $5,500 less than any claims for professional services yet rendered by the board.

Secretary Teller's trip to Colorado is taken in order to assist the republicans of that state in the now closing campaign. He left on Saturday night, and will remain in Colorado until after the election. The state and congressional tickets are very acceptable to the administration. It is understood that President Arthur is very desirous of having the cabinet take an active part in campaign work, but the present cabinet is not a very oratorical one.

Mr. Tilden's Income Tax Case.

WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 16—Solicitor-General Phillips to-day when case No. 157 was called in the Supreme Court moved for and obtained a dismissal and a discontinuance. Case No. 157 is known as the appeal of President Tilden from the judgment of the Circuit Court of New York, over-ruling his demurrer to the suit instituted against him by order of the late alleged President Hayes to recover alleged income taxes. It appeared on the calendar as Samuel J. Tilden, appellant, versus the United States. It seems that the present law officers of the Government, after examining into the merits of the case, regard the suit as untenable in law or fact, and this action, taken entirely without pressure from Mr. Tilden, is regarded as an honorable discharge of the elected President of 1876 from the imputations put on him by the fraudulent President in the suit."

Thus has another shameless attempt at blackmail, made by the perjurers and forgers and scoundrels who also put Hayes into office, come to nought. Clear in the right Gov. Tilden never for one moment gave way to the fraudulent, blackmailing demand upon him, and thus the perjury which instuted that suit exposes itself. To him it must be matter of great gratification, as it is also to every honest man in the country.

We do not know when we have seen a good point more fairly made than this, at a great democratic meeting in Brooklyn, a few days ago, by Mr. Kinsella. The report of the meeting says; —The first of the big meetings arranged for by the Democratic Campaign Committee in Brooklyn was held last night in the Brooklyn Academy. The audience over flowed the hall. Montague street was alive with the surplus of Democrats. Thomas Kinsella, who was elected Chairman, said:

As a matter of private judgment, perhaps, we have no right to find fault with Mr. Vanderbilt, when he is willing, under certain conditions, to see the public damned. With the modifications worked out in our day in the theological belief of our fathers, we are not scared by this great man's private malelection, but we are resolved he shall not work the public's damnation through his use and abuse of privileges which the public have confered upon him.

Mr. Jay Gould has doubtless been felicitating himself of late that he has succeeded in sending to a political Hades, from which there is no resurrection, an official chosen to watch and guard the interests of 5,000.000 of freemen. But if there is anything the manly and intelligent voters of this State are resolved upon at this time, it is that this avaricious and mysterious malefactor shall not profit by an effrontery which shed a light upon the danger which now confronts us, as the lightning does upon the traveler when it discloses to him at once the path of danger and the path of safety.

Jere Black Recites A Fable.

AN INTERESTING STORY AND VERY LITTLE ABOUT THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Black was interviewed recently on the Independent movement. When asked what was meant by the Republican uprising Mr. Black said: "It means washing out, Saunders."

"I do not understand you at all," said his interlocutor. "Then," said the judge, "I must tell you a story. In the reign of Charles II. a dirty boy, who seemed to know nothing about himself except that he had the name of Saunders, was taken from the gutters of Chancery lane, London, and set to keeping the door of an attorney's office. There he learned to read and write. He was made a clerk, and afterwards being admitted to practice, he became one of the greatest special pleaders in England. He rose to be a sergeant, then solicitor-general, the official head of the profession. All this while he stuck to the habits of dirt and dishonesty that he had contracted when a waif of the streets. He lived alone on Butcher's row, and was so filthy in his person that he broke out into running sores, smelling so badly that it was a martyrdom to sit near him in court. He did not pretend to have any moral principles. He even boasted about his his personal uncleanness, and told young barristers that although he never was married it was not fact to be denied that he had issue of his body. Nevertheless, he was tolerated and promoted by a corrupt ministry, which needed such services as he alone could render; for he had ability, wealth and impudence, a heart that feared neither God nor man, and a cheek that blushed at nothing. Altogether he was in their eyes a very 'grand party.' At length when they wanted an unscrupulous tool at the head of the judiciary to decide a most unrighteous cause in favor of the crown (Rex vs. the Corporation of London), they made Saunders chief justice of the king's bench. Then the decent men of the law determined they would stand him no longer unless his habits were reformed. They washed him by main force, cleaned him up, compelled him to wear the apparel of a gentleman and to live in a respectable part of the town. But cleanliness was fatal to him. The grand old party died of it in less than two months. And now here are Stewart and Wolfe and Marshall and Lear and Mitchell and McClure and a thousand other Republicans of honor and sense, who declare that they have endured as much as they can from the 'grand old party.' They will not suffer the martyrdom of sitting with it longer; the running issues of its body are too offensive to be borne. They insist that it must be made decently clean and put on its good behavior. Therefore they are after it with soap and rain water, and sponges and towels and a whole suit of good clothes, determined to wash it and dress it in spite of its cries and struggles. They do not mean to kill it, but perhaps like Saunders, it cannot survive the loss of its filth. At all events its friends and guardians, and those who live by its bounty, protest violently that the cruel Independents will be the death of it if they succeed in making it clean."

NEWS ITEMS.

General Roscerans reports to the democratic National Committee that California will be democratic by about 10,000 majority and that five of the six congressman will be democratic.

Ex-Senator Boutwell, who has recently returned from Massachusetts, is reported to have said that there would be a close fight in that state.

Serious differences have arisen among the Republican leaders in New Hampshire, and it will be a matter of surprise if they do not result in party defeat. Ex-Senator Wadleigh asserts that Hale's nomination for Governor was procured by "shameless bribery, hateful to all honest men" and that "Republicans can best serve their party by defeating such a candidate."

Prominent government officers, including Secretary Chandler and Assistant Post-master-General Hatton, who have recently been in New York, bring back discouraging reports of Republican prospects. Mr. Hatton said to a friend that things were looking as bad as possible there, and Secretary Chandler's opinion was about as gloomy. They fear that the disaffection will cost the republicans a very serious loss in the congressional delegation, and for that reason will make a special effort to prevent such a disaster Judge Folger is no less despondent, but he is evidently making no preparations to leave the Treasury.

AT WANAMAKER'S

Visitors to Philadelphia are invited to visit the store, whether to see or to buy. Your parcels are checked; a waiting-room is provided, where you may rest with ladies and children; guides conduct you through the house, or you wander at will; there are many things of interest to see, and a welcome.

For two years, perhaps, we have had the richest, largest, most varied and most exhaustive collection of dress-goods in Philadelphia. Before that, we may have had the largest, and even the most exhaustive, but perhaps not the richest. The slowest trade to come to a new merchant is the trade of luxury. It is the slowest to change from one to another. But it does change.

We may say our dress-goods of all sorts are at about their highest now.

Second and third circles, southeast from center.

Silks of all sorts have come; and never were silks more acceptable. And these words have a meaning here beyond any they could have elsewhere; because of the greater variety of wants that look to us for supply. We must have all accepted styles, and all the approved qualities of those styles; and, as to colors, can you think of one that we can do without?

A store that has only one class of trade can get along with comparatively few silks. Which stock would you rather buy out of?

[illegible]

Two damask towels at 15 and 18 cents may serve to show what we gain by buying of the makers. The very same towels are in the wholesale trade in New York at about 21 and 22 cents, which means at least 25 cents at retail.

We are not going to say that all our retail prices are below New York wholesale; nothing of the sort. "More than one swallow to make a summer." But where such towels are to be got for 15 cents is a good place to look for bed and table-linen, and all the other linens. That's what we mean exactly; it's true, too.

[illegible] City hall square entrance.

A very wide and surprisingly good navy-blue twilled flannel for 50 cents; 45-inch.

Do you remember a 35-cent flannel for 25 cents, of which we had 18,000 yards last fall? Afterward we got 7,000 yards more of it; and a little of it is left yet. That is 23-inch. This wide flannel is fully as good as that.

Third circle, southeast from center.

All the warmer sorts of underwear are ready; for men, women and children; thick-cotton, merino, wool, and silk. All the sorts needed for all sorts of people with all sorts of notions; and, for people who want it, there is quite a little wit about underwear to be picked up at the counter. Where else would you look for it? Not in books surely; for goods are changing all the time; and so get ahead of books.

West of Arcade, 1313 Chestnut; west counter.

Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Sloan were in Philadelphia this week.

The Misses Drinker of Scranton are visiting relatives here.

Mrs. Henry McKelvy arrived from the west last Friday.

W. R. Tubbs of the Exchange Hotel went to Philadelphia last Monday.

Rev. L. Zahner and family have gone to Delaware to visit Mrs. Zahner's father.

Moses and J. F. McHenry, the Stillwater Merchants, were in Philadelphia this week.

Hon. I. K. Krickbaum is in Philadelphia this week, viewing the Bi-Centennial celebration.

Miss Maria Williams of New Bedford, Mass., is visiting at Mr. L. Bernhard's, 5th street.

W. J. Buckalew Esq., has been suffering for several weeks past from an attack of rheumatism.

William Krickbaum and T. J. Vanderslice are among the number from this county who took in the Bi-centennial.

Rev. Dr. Mitchell was in attendance at the Presbyterian synod last week, and consequently his church was closed last Sunday.

Mrs. Drake, formerly of this town, but for a number of years past residing at Lock Haven is spending a few weeks here with her relatives and friends.

Wm. L. Manning, of Jackson township, returned home last Saturday. He has been absent some three months in the office of J. F. LeClare, at Rochester, N. Y.

"Hazel Kirke" has been performed over 2,000 consecutive times, the longest run on record.

Charles Krug has the contract for erecting a building for E. A. Rawlings, next to the COLUMBIAN office.

The Friendship Fire Company went to Philadelphia on Monday, where they took part in the parade on Tuesday.

The COLUMBIAN is the only paper in the county that contained a report of the fair. Are our contemporaries asleep?

We learn from several dozen of our exchanges that the leaves of the trees are now falling. Had any of you observed the fact before?

Judge and Mrs. Elwell went to Towanda on Monday, having been called there by the illness of their son, E. W. Elwell, who has an attack of fever.

LOST.—A gold, onyx locket, for a gentleman, last week, near D. L. & W. depot, Bloomsburg. A liberal reward will be paid for its return to this office.

William H. Gilmore authorizes us to state that the report that he is for Beaver is entirely unfounded. He is for Pattison first, last, and all the time.

H. Cavalier Smith Esq., Republican candidate for Congress in this district, was in town on Wednesday. He is a young attorney between twenty five and thirty years of age.

Thomas Gorey is erecting a neat frame dwelling house for himself, on West street. Tom is a first-class carpenter, and will no doubt display his skill and taste on this building.

Never interrupt any conversation with a hacking Cough: it creates a bad impression. Better invest a quarter of a dollar in a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and cure it.

Mrs. Curley of Centralia has obtained a divorce from her husband, who is now serving a term of twelve years in the penitentiary, for killing a man named Gunning, at Centralia. The circumstances of the trial will be well remembered. Mrs. Curley secured her divorce in Schuylkill county.

T. L. Gunton has purchased the marble in the Roat vault and will remove it from the Episcopal cemetery. The remains that were entombed within, have been removed to Rosemont, and a handsome tombstone will be erected over them.

The Fishingcreek Improvement Company is putting a boom in the creek at Lightstreet, and will open the creek sufficient to permit the driving of logs from the head waters. Stock has been taken by many of the residents of Lightstreet, and operations will be pushed with energy. If successful, the project will be a great benefit to that village, and will furnish an outlet for all the timber in the upper end of the county. It is certainly worth the trial that is now being made.

The library of Hon. Joshua W. Comley, of Danville is one of the finest private collections in the state. It consists of about 2500 law books, including valuable text books, and the reports of many of the states of the United States courts, and the English decisions. His miscellaneous collection is one that could have been made only by a ripe scholar. It contains all of the classics, Latin, Greek and French as well as all the choicest works in English literature, and many rare books. Mr. Comley, who is considered one of the ablest lawyers in the state, has retired from active practice, and he spends much of his time in his office among his books, reading the old classics in the original, as readily as most men read their native tongue. It is not often that a man who has enjoyed so extensive a practice as has Mr. Comley, finds time to keep himself familiar with the dead languages.

Democratic Meetings.

ELLIOTT AND AFRICA IN COLUMBIA.

A large audience, a number of ladies included, greeted the two Democratic state candidates at the Opera House on Monday evening. David Lowenberg presided and the following vice presidents were chosen: J. K. Grotz, W. H. Rhawn, H. A. Sweppenhiser, C. G. Barkley, John Watters, Hon. James Lake, William Jayne, Patrick McFadden, William Kreamer, Albert Herbine, John Girton, David Armstrong, G. A. Herring, and Peter Jones; secretaries: John Yost, O. A. Stunger, H. V. White, Joseph Robbins.

J. Simpson Africa, candidate for Secretary of Internal Affairs, was the first speaker, but as he was suffering from a severe cold, his remarks were brief. He was followed by Mortimer F. Elliott, in an eloquent and forcible address of over an hour. He arraigned the Stalwart Republicans in scathing terms. He said they had kept in power for the past ten years simply on the record of their first four years under Lincoln. As well might the Democratic party ask to be reinstated, simply because the administration of Jefferson or Jackson was pure and honest. The Republican candidates, from Beaver down, said the speaker, dare not discuss the issues of the day on the stump. Not one word have they to say about their platform, about political assessments and the like. Their only plea is for the "grand old party" that was pure fifteen years ago. It is mighty hard for them to lose their hold on the offices, and they are doing it with very bad grace. He paid his respects to Don Cameron, and while he was willing to admit that Beaver was an honest man, it was impossible for him to be an independent governor; he would be controlled by the men who made him what he is, who bought his vote for Grant at Chicago by promising to make him governor. He would be controlled by the men who demanded and obtained from Gov. Hoyt a pardon for Kemble and other bribers. The speaker was frequently interrupted by applause, and it was generally admitted that it was one of the best political speeches made here in many years.

AT BENTON.

On Tuesday morning the Democratic state candidates started for Benton to attend the afternoon meeting. They were accompanied by C. R. Buckalew, R. Buckingham, chairman of the county committee, David Lowenberg, Geo. E. Elwell, C. W. Miller, G. W. Sterner, N. U. Funk and J. H. Maize. At Orangeville the party was joined by the Orangeville Band and a delegation under the lead of W. H. Snyder Esq. At Stillwater the procession was still further augmented, so that by the time Benton was reached there was a long string of wagons in line. At the bridge the Benton Band met the visitors and escorted them to the Exchange Hotel, where a large crowd of people awaited them. There were delegations from Sugarloaf, Pine, Greenwood, Jackson, Fishingcreek and Orange, making a large crowd. The meeting was called to order in McHenry's board yard at two o'clock by Rohr McHenry, and the following officers elected: chairman W. H. Snyder, vice presidents: Peter Kase, William Appleman, John C. Wenner, John Baker, David Crossley, Elias McHenry William Lawton, Iram Derr, C. B. McHenry, C. L. More, W. H. Kitchen, Evan Funk; secretaries, John S. Kline, E. J. McHenry. Hon. C. R. Buckalew made the first address, followed by J. Simpson Africa, who said but a few words, owing to his severe cold. Mr. Elliott then made one of his characteristic speeches, and held the close attention of his audience for an hour. A stand had been erected and beautifully decorated with wreaths and flowers, but the speaking was done from another point to avoid the cold wind that was blowing at the time. At four o'clock the speakers started for Jerseytown.

AT JERSEYTOWN.

The following officers were elected: chairman, Isaac Wagner; vice presidents, Isaac Ikeler, Hugh McCollum, Dr. Swisher, C. Kramer, John M. Smith, Warren McCollum, Capt. William Allen, N. Welliver and Jeremiah Wintersteen. A large crowd was in attendance, and speeches were made by the candidates. Everywhere a feeling of confidence prevails that the Democrats are sure to win this fall.

W. W. Hart for State Senator.

It is with no ordinary feelings of satisfaction and assurance that we endorse the action of the Democratic conferees composing this Senatorial district in their representative capacity. After a somewhat protracted, yet friendly contest, the majority of the conferees believed that they were justified in placing Mr. Hart as the Democrat nominee for State Senator. We have so recently refered to his character as a citizen and as a true representative Democrat, that there is no occasion at this time to make extended comments. That his name will add strength and confidence, thus creating a feeling of interest that helps to unite and bring into active exercise the masses, will tend to increase the majority in this, as well as in other sections of the district, is generally conceded. Mr. Hart is in the prime of life, possessing those traits which commend one to the favorable consideration of his fellows, and has used every opportunity to appropriate his time in a way to develop practical talents such as establish on a true foundation and return, to the possessor, positions of honor and trust. By his own industry, energy and application he has made success, and, at Harrisburg, as a senator, representing Lycoming, Columbia, Montour and Sullivan counties, we feel assured his course will be one that will reflect honor upon himself and benefit his constituency. That he will be elected by a majority numbered by thousands is among the safe predictions in the near future. Williamsport Sun & Banner.

A brief sketch of our candidate for state senator may not be out of place. He was born in Clinton township, Lycoming county, August 23, 1843, where his father, Adam Hart, one of the oldest and most respected farmers in the country, still resides. Mr. Hart is, therefore, as will be seen, in the fortieth year of his age. Having first attended the common schools of his district, he afterwards received a liberal education at Tuscarora Academy, in Juniata county and at Williamsport Dickinson Seminary. He read law in the city of Williamsport, and was admitted to the Lycoming bar in 1869. He has always been a working and reliable Democrat, and was elected District Attorney of his native country in 1877, by a majority of 1099, leading his ticket several hundred votes, and was re-elected in 1877 by the unusually large majority of 2,108. He is a sound lawyer, and his practice is rapidly increasing. His nomination as senator was made unanimous on the 355th ballot at Williamsport recently, and his election in the district by a majority of at least 4,000 is certain. His nomination was received generally with satisfaction, and as it was made entirely in accordance with the rules of the democratic party, he is entitled to the hearty support of every democrat in this county and the whole district.

N. W. Ayer & Sons' Newspaper Directory for 1882 has been issued, and is very complete. By reference to its pages we find that the COLUMBIAN is the only paper in the county that makes affidavit to its circulation. All the others are either claimed or estimated, and the figures are clear out of the way. For instance, one that claims a circulation of 1000, actually has not half that number, while most of the others may be discounted from one third to one half. Such reports are not reliable and the book makers should adopt the rule of crediting a paper with no circulation at all, unless the number is sworn to by the publishers. The COLUMBIAN has 1200 subscribers.

Conference of M. E. Bishops at Berwick.

All the Bishops of the Methodist Church (with the exception of Bishop Foster who is in India) are now in Conference at Berwick, deliberating on matters connected with Church work—the appointment of members of their body to, and fixing of dates for the various conferences of the United States, the missionary fields &c. A public reception was given last night at the residence of M. W. Jackson. The pulpits of Berwick and neighboring towns will be filled on Sunday by the Bishops.

When we Dare Vote.

When is a man of legal age to entitle him to vote? This question will soon be discussed as usual at election time, and it is too often that men wrangle on points of law governing in such cases without knowing anything of what they speak. It is well, then, to have the law clearly defined on this point, when is a man of legal age to vote? According to law a voter is of age legally and entitled to the privilege of the elective franchise on the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birth. In other words, a man born on the 8th day of November, 1861, can vote on age at the next election on the 7th of November, 1882.

Democratic Meetings.

Meetings will be held through the county at the following times and places: Lightstreet school house, Oct. 27th; Bendertown school house, Oct. 28th; Canby school house Oct. 30th; Iola, Oct. 30th; Stonytown, Mann's hotel, Oct. 31st; Orangeville school house, Oct. 31st; Union church, Nov. 1st; Rohrsburg, Nov. 2d; Espy school house, Nov. 2d; Evansville school house, Nov. 2d; Buck Horn school house, Nov. 3d; Rupert school house, Nov. 4th. Competent speakers will be present, and make addresses on the issues of the day. Members of standing or vigilance committees are requested to make all the necessary arrangements in their respective townships.

A Revolver in Dangerous Hands

An insane man entered the Philadelphia and Erie railroad station at Northumberland, last week Wednesday evening, and presenting himself at the window of the ticket office demanded of the man inside a ticket for the other world, at the same time presenting a loaded revolver and informing the ticket agent that he wanted no delay in the matter, that if he did not comply at, once he (the ticket man) would be furnished with a ticket for that far off region. For quite a while the lunatic had possession of the station, and not until a number of the yard hands and men from the nail works arrived was he arrested. He was taken to the Sunbury jail. He had been drinking and was delirious from its effects. He said he was on his way to Pittsburg to hunt work.

The Story of Hazel Kirke.

Dunstan Kirke, and old miller, has promised his daughter Hazel's hand to Squire Rodney, who has loaned him money, and educated the daughter. The latter loves Arthur Carringford, a young English lord whom her father has saved from drowning. Rodney finds this out, and generously gives her up, but the stern old man will not allow the sacrifice, but accuses her of unfaithfulness, and drives her out. She marries Arthur, but upon being informed that her marriage was illegal, leaves him in her indignation at his treachery. She wanders back to the old mill and finds her father has become blind, and is about to lose his home. Rodney still loves her, and asks her hand. She consents, but the old man is still unforgiving. Hazel tries to drown herself, and her father, hearing her cries but being unable to assist her, loses his reason. Arthur finally appears with proofs of the legality of their marriage, and the old man's wandering mind returns upon hearing Hazel sing an old song of her childhood.

This play will be presented at the Opera House with special scenery on Tuesday evening October 31st., by the Madison Square Theatre Company of New York. Secure seats early.

Wilkesbarre's Postmaster.

THE BARGAIN IN PURSUANCE OF WHICH ORR WAS APPOINTED—SCRANTON'S VOTE FOR KEIFER.

The Wilkesbarre Record prints the following editorial on the removal of Postmaster Smith and the appointment of Albert J. Orr as part of the bargain which induced Congressman Scranton to vote for Keifer for speaker of the House:

Whether the post office of Wilkesbarre was filled by a man who had no substantial recommendation to the place except that Mr. Scranton, the congressman from this district, was for him, or by one who was efficient, capable, respectable and backed by the petition of the community, is not perhaps a question of State or national significance. The political scheme or system that made the appointment of Albert J. Orr in the place of Douglass Smith possible against the earnest and repeated protests of those who had a right to be consulted is the thing to be condemned, that needs the attention of the people of the State and nation, and this attention has been aroused none to soon. The citizens of Wilkesbarre will survive the insult, indignity and outrage of this appointment. The governor of the State will lose nothing in the estimation of his constituents because of the failure to obtain for the people of his own town a respectable and acceptable office, but Republican government will be found a delusion and a sham, and go down to irretrievable ruin if the system that made Orr's appointment possible is not destroyed root and branch.

Listen to the shameful story: Garfield, the Independent, dead; Arthur, the Stalwart President. The control of the speakership in the house of representatives, at Washington, desired by Arthur. Hiscock's election assured. The President, as a forlorn hope, sends for Cameron and gives him the task of beating Hiscock. Any enterprise involving boldness, audacity and unscrupulous use of means is dear to our senator, especially if with success is coupled so glittering a prize as the unquestioned control of all within executive gift in a great State. The first step in the strange task was to secure a majority of the Pennsylvania delegation for Keifer. It was not easy, for a majority were personally pledged to Hiscock. Judicious promises of five chairmanships secured votes enough, save two, to control the caucus. The sagacious eye of the senator selected Scranton and Jadwin as the men likely to be induced to forsake their pledges.

An interveiw at his house on the Sabbath, extending far into the small hours of morning, did the business. Said the Senator: "I had to promise them everything, but I had to have them." Everything in Scranton's case included the postoffice at Wilkesbarre. In spite of the strongest case that ever was presented against a man at Washington, in spite of the admission of Postmaster-General James that Smith ought to be retained, and that if he had had his way he would be kept; in spite of the admission of Postmaster-General Howe that Orr's appointment ought not to have been made; in spite of the most earnest protests on the part of the Govenor of the State to the President himself, backed by the merchants, lawyers, business men and clergymen of the city to be affected, the disgraceful appointment was made. The President of the United States lent his high office to complete the outrage. He became and was a party to the corrupt bargain by which Senator J. Donald Cameron, through the purchased vote of Joseph A. Scranton, cheated the House out of its chosen speaker and put in his place one whose inefficiency is so conspicuous, whose failure has been so lamentable that even among his partisans he finds no defenders.

It is not wonderful that this kind of personal politics has become so odious, nor that the people have at last determined to have no more of it. If Pennsylvanians had not been long suffering and patient, revolution would have come long since. The Wilkesbarre case did not make the revolt. Long years of assumption of absolute ownership of men and positions on the part of the Camerons has borne its legitimate and necessary fruit. The manhood of this and other States is in rebellion. Little by little these bold robbers have stolen away the people's rights until their power became so great and so well recognized that no one thought of aspiring to any place of honor without their consent. But the Wilkesbarre case has illustrated more completely than any other the ramifications of the system which couples together in bonds of villainy the President of the United States and a man like Joseph A. Scranton. The people of this community resent the outrage and are joined by all the people of the State in resenting it, as it is a blow at the right of all, and thus the case is lifted out of its narrow local significance and surroundings and has become a factor in a contest that will one day succeed, after a bitter battle, and in a better day when ability and honest merit need not cringe at the feet of any man as the price to be paid for promotion at the hands of the people.

A Reproductive Comet.

The present comet in the eastern sky, which can be distinctly seen by everyone at early morning, is certainly the most remarkable one of all the modern comets. Prof. Lewis Swift, director of the Warner Observatory, Rochester, New York, states that the comet grazed the sun so closely as to cause great disturbance, so much so that it has divided into no less than eight separate parts, all of which can be distinctly seen by a good telescope. There is only one other instance on record where a comet has divided, that one being Biela's comet of 1846; which separated into two parts. Applications have been made on Mr. H. H. Warner by parties who have noted these cometary offshoots, claiming the $200 prize for each of them. Whether the great comet will continue to produce a brood of smaller comets remains to be seen.

Rules for Cooking Vegetables.

A French cook gives the following general rules for cooking all kinds of vegetables: "Green vegetables should be thoroughly washed in cold water and then dropped into water which has been salted and is beginning to boil. There should be a tablespoonful of salt for each two quarts of water. If the water boils long before the vegetables are put in, it has lost all its gases, and the mineral ingredients are deposited on the bottom and sides of the kettle, so that the water is flat and tasteless, and the vegetables will not look well or have a fine flavor. The time for boiling green vegetables depends much upon the age and time they have been gathered and the more quickly they are cooked. Below is a very good time table for cooking vegetagles.

Potatoes boiled, thirty minutes.
Potatoes baked, forty-five minutes.
Sweet potatoes boiled, fifty minutes.
Sweet potatoes baked, sixty minutes.
Squash boiled, twenty-five minutes.
Green peas boiled, twenty to forty minutes.
Shelled beans boiled, sixty minutes.
String beans boiled, one to two hours.
Green corn, thirty to sixty minutes.
Asparagus, fifteen to thirty minutes.
Spinach, one to two hours.
Tomatoes, fresh, one hour.
Tomatoes, canned, thirty minutes.
Cabbage, forty-five minutes or two hours.
Cauliflower, one ar two hours.
Dandelions, two or three hours.
Beet greens, one hour.
Onions, one or two hours.
Beets, one or two hours.
Turnips, white, forty five to sixty minutes.
Turnips, yellow, one and a half hours.
Parsnips, one or two hours.
Carrots, one or two hours,

A BAPTIST MINISTER'S EXPERIENCE.

I am a Baptist Minister, and before I even thought of ever being a clergyman, I graduated in medicine, but left a lucrative practice for my present profession, 40 years ago. I was for many years a sufferer from quinsey; "Thomas' Eclectric Oil cured me." was also troubled with hoarseness, and Thomas' Eclectric Oil always relieved me. My wife and child had diphtheria, and "Thomas' Eclectric Oil cured them," and if taken in time it will cure seven times out of ten. I am confident it is a cure for the most obstinate cold or cough. and if any one will take a small teaspoon and half fill it with the Oil, and then place the end of the spoon in one nostril and draw the Oil out of the spoon into the head by snuffing as hard as they can, until the Oil falls over into the throat, and practice that twice a week. I don't care how offensive their head may be, it will clean it out and cure their catarrh. For deafness and earache it has done wonders to my certain knowledge. It is the only medicine dubbed patent medicine that I have ever felt like recommending, and I am very anxious to see it in every place, for I tell you that I would not be without it in my house for any consideration. I am now suffering with a pain like rheumatism in my right limb, and nothing relieves me like Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

Preparing Plants for winter.

The American Agriculturist for October, says that it is a great mistake to delay the work of preparation for winter until it is suggested by cool nights, or a warning given by blighting frosts. When a plant has been taken from a pot and planted in open ground it usually out grows its former place, and is too large for any vessel of convenient size. The root should be cut away to a considerable extent, and likewise the top or foliage must be correspondingly reduced. Novices often fail at this point, for they dislike to part with any of the new growths, and set the plant in a pot unpruned, and expect, what is not possible, that it will flourish. Cut back root system and branch system equally is the rule. Plants when thus transplanted need to be favored by being kept in the shade and sheltered from the drying winds until they have made a good start in the pots. Many of the house plants are kept in their pots during summer and they will need repotting, or the pot washed and the surface soil replaced by fresh, rich earth. A larger pot is needed by those plants whose roots have formed a mat along the inner surface. The ball of earth can be examined quickly by spreading the left hand on the vessel—the stem passing between the fingers and with the other hand on the bottom invert the pot and give the edge a downward tap against some object. If this does not succeed, pour some water around the edge, and after a short time repeat the operation. All old pots should be clean, and if new ones are used soak them in water until the pores are filled. A piece of broken vessel is placed over the botom hole before filling. All pots, soil, etc., should be kept on hand.

Puny, weak, and sickly children are made healthy and strong by useing Brown's Iron Bitters.

A young country lady of Missouri slashed an insulting fop with a knife. She probably wanted to cut a swell.

H. B. The Bad and Worthless Are never imitated or counterfeited.

This is especially true of a family medicine, and it is positive proof that the remedy imitated is of the highest value.

As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprung up and began to steal the notices in which the press and people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B.

Many others started nostrums put up in similar style to H. B., with variously cunningly devised names in which the word "Hop" or "Hops" were used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies or cures, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hop" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits.

Beware of them. Touch none of them, but: Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a bunch or cluster of green Hops on the white label. Trust nothing else. Druggists and dealers are warned against dealing in imitations or counterfeits. (9)

Faded hair recovers its youthful color and soft, silky texture by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam.

What shall we grow and how shall we fit it for market.

In September, after I was ten years old in July, my father sent me to Hallowell with a load of potatoes and corn meal for B. F. Melvin, then a leading grocer and provision dealer. As I started, feeling I dare say about as well as the little Corsican did when he started to cross the Alps, my father said: "Daniel, remember one thing, not only to day, but as long as you live; never tell a man what he wants, but find out from him, carry it to him and he will pay your price." I have never forgotten it. If a man wants Early Rose potatoes, don't tell him something else is better, but engage him a load of such as he wants, if you have them. If a customer wants an ounce or an ounce and half of salt to the pound of butter, let him have it. If he don't want it worked after it is salted and set away, carry it to him without. If he wants it colored color it. If he wants winthrop Greenings don't try to palm of tall Harvey on him. Get a line of customers that want your goods; study their tastes and notions, gratfy them in everything but price, and you may fix that to suit yourself, if a reasonable man. These thoughts were called to my mind the other day at Litchfield, at the June meeting of Kenebec County Grange. The last topic discussed was "What varieties of apples shall we raise for home use and for market?" The discussion was opened by the well-known writer and fruit grower, W. P. Atherton, of Hallowell. Mr. A. is a deep thinker, a ready speaker and thoroughly at home on the apple or apple tree question. He commenced by saying first consult your market, see what is wanted and govern yourself accordingly. If you have a retail market and sell to consumers, find out what will suit them. Get a line of fruit that will keep you supplied with marketable and eatable apples all the time and thus keep your customers when you have once got them on your string. If you are to send your fruit to a wholesale market or run it through the hands of middlemen, get three or four standard varieties and give your chief attention to them. "First consult your market," might be more forcibly impressed on the minds of beginners in fruit culture.
